

FENS Summer School 2019

The Serbian Nutrition Society and the faculty of Pharmacy, University of Belgrade will be hosting the FENS Summer School in Belgrade on 19th to 23rd August 2019.

About the Summer School

It is aimed at young scientists (students - master/doctoral – and post-docs) preferentially with an epidemiological or public health background that would like to update their knowledge on how to translate scientific findings into recommendations. It will focus on food based dietary guidelines (FBDGs).

In this Summer School, you will meet leading experts in the field from Europe as well as many local scientists from a very interesting region of Europe. The lectures span from conception to practical aspects of Food Based Dietary Guidelines (FBDGs) and will include broader topics of use and the translation of scientific data for public health initiatives.

The week-long FENS Summer School supports professional and personal capacity building by providing a stimulating atmosphere to update participants knowledge, to learn about perspectives of scientific approaches, and to build up their networks with like-minded people in a supportive atmosphere.

Closing date for applications is 25 June 2019. For an application form and more information about the Summer School and how to book, visit the new FENS website here:
